Construction

The construction industry in Florida supports all sectors of the state's dynamic real estate market and involves a multitude of disciplines. Over the years, developers, property owners, general contractors, construction managers, subcontractors, suppliers, architects, engineers, consultants, sureties, lenders and others have come to rely on the Construction Law attorneys at Ruden McClosky as their advisors and advocates in managing the often complex legal issues that are commonplace in this industry.

Our attorneys offer experience, unique understanding and insight into all aspects of the development and construction process, including:

- Advice and documentation regarding joint venture and business operational matters;
- Negotiation and drafting of contracts documents of all types;
- Project administration and delivery systems;
- Construction loans, bonds, liens and insurance;
- Environmental compliance;
- OSHA, labor and employment issues;
- Dispute resolution.

Our attorneys focus on anticipating and avoiding business problems that are often associated with the Construction Industry. If disputes arise, our attorneys seek to resolve the disputes on their clients' behalf without litigation whenever possible. However, when litigation becomes inevitable, our attorneys are highly experienced, both in the courtroom or with arbitrators in seeking the best, cost-effective result for the client.
